For the past 24 years, Nothin’ Fancy has been a steady staple for bluegrass fans and festivals. And although they’ve gone through a handful of personnel changes in the last two decades, the band has embraced each change and forged ahead without abandon. Their latest release, Time Changes Everything, is a perfect example of embracing that change, drawing from the strength of it, creating a new fresh sound, and remaining true to their goal of being themselves. Founding members Mike Andes (mandolin/vocals), Mitchell Davis (banjo), and Chris Sexton (fiddle/vocals) received an energetic jolt—although they clearly have never suffered in that department—when they added the Cox brothers, Caleb (guitar/vocals) and James (bass) to the ensemble.

On this album, Mike sings eight of the twelve tracks while leaving three for Caleb and one for Chris. And while four of the songs are written by band members, two by Mike and two by Caleb, this time the band dug deep for material that could just as easily have been written specifically for them. And through them all, the theme of “changing times” runs rampant. Per the album’s liner notes:

“The songs on this project all reflect the changes that happen with the passage of time, for better or for worse. We hear it when one leaves the comforts of home for war in “A Soldier’s Love,” or when one longs to return home despite home not being there anymore as in “Papa Wants To Go Back,” or when the progress of man goes too far in “The Last Lonely Eagle.” Some songs tell the sad story that time sometimes erases even love as in “Don’t Think Twice, It’s All Right,” “Time Changes Everything,” and “Please Say Anything.”

The old adage, “the only thing a person can count on is change” may be true. But if Time Changes Everything proves anything about Nothin’ Fancy and their journey, it’s that they should change their name to “Something Really Special.”
